

Don't Let Michael Vick Benefit By Abusing Dogs

Petition Update 3 (May 29, 2009)

Make no mistake about it, there is a growing movement to forgive dog-abuser Michael Vick and restore him to the prominence he once enjoyed as a football star. Fans, owners, coaches, fellow players, and many others insensitive to Vick's criminal acts believe that not only did he "do the crime," but since he "did the time" he must be forgiven. Forgiveness, a matter of personal choice, is one thing. Allowing him to profit from the celebrity he acquired by being a savage abuser of dogs is quite another.

Thankfully, not everyone does-as reflected in the many signatures ISAR is receiving for its anti-Vick petition. For example, Professional Football Hall of Famer Sam Huff won't forgive and forget. It has been reported that when he was inducted into the Southern Conference's first Hall of Fame group, Huff had some choice words about dog-abuser Michael Vick: "I think they ought to turn him loose with the dogs." An eye for an eye.
